Changing Flight Instructors

Changing instructors can cost you a lot of money if you aren't careful. If for some reason you do end up with the wrong instructor, you should know pretty quickly. But after all the research you have done, hopefully you won't have made the wrong choice. If you end up just HATING your instructor after a few flights, this is the time to make the switch; this is also the case for switching flight schools also. So if you end up wanting to do this then, the earlier the better.

You don't want to wait. The longer you wait, the more it is going to cost you. Remember that whoever signs you off for your flight test has to have done every area of operation with you. If you have done all of your training and switch instructors, the new instructor has to do everything and yes including a cross country.
